Herbert Hovenkamp, Mark D. Janis, Mark A. Lemley and Christopher R. Leslie

A comprehensive resource that fully examines the intersection of intellectual property and antitrust law in order to help practitioners steer clear of unexpected problems. While intellectual property licensing arrangements are typically pro-competitive, the Justice Department's rekindled interest in these arrangements now requires that companies factor antitrust considerations into the drafting and review of intellectual property licensing arrangements. Thus, licensing agreements involving intellectual property must now be drafted with two considerations in mind: maximizing the commercial value of intellectual property rights, and minimizing antitrust risks.
